Developing Trustworthiness: The Right Ingredients

Here are some more “ingredients” to include in your daily life as you build your tower of Trustworthiness:

- Tell the truth.
- Be sincere. Say what you mean and mean what you say.
- If you find something that doesn't belong to you, return it.
- Keep your word.
- Be reliable.
- Return things you borrow.
- Keep private information private.
- Don't gossip.
- Don't ask a friend to do something wrong to keep your friendship.
- Stand up for and act on what you believe.

Teaching your child to be trustworthy doesn't happen overnight. Instead, it is something that teachers and parents can model on a consistent basis. Students can learn the ingredients of a trustworthy character. People with strong character are people we can trust.

Trust is not automatic. Earning trust takes time, losing trust can happen quickly. Honesty, promise keeping, loyalty and integrity are four ingredients that are key to building trustworthiness.

Modeling this trait will allow students to learn that trustworthiness is essential to building positive relationships with others. A trustworthy person is honest, reliable, loyal and has integrity. What does being trustworthy mean to you? As a parent we want to trust our children to make the right choices when we are not around, to do the right things when presented with a childhood challenge.

School Success Tips:

- After your child submits their weekly assignments take some time to celebrate their hard work for the week.
- Remind students to challenge themselves to work beyond the required assignments.
- Help your child to set 3 achievable goals for segment 2.
